

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

FRIDAY NOV 8, 1901.

THE SHENANDCAH ELECTION.

The result of the Shenandoah election is just what many thought it would be and if it had gone otherwise, it would have been just what these same parties thought it would be. The politics of the county was in such a mixed condition that few ventured to express an opinion apon the resu t. What would take place on election day, few knew before hand. At an early hour, it was noticed that the democrats were not making their usual fight. At the polls in Woodstock, the men who have won a reputation by their hard work on election days were conspiculous by their absence. At other precincts some of the most active democratic workers were hard at work for the candidates of the republican party. The compromise made a short time ago proved to be only partial. At some precincts, the bitter factional feeling in the democratic party, which has been so long in existence very clearly manifested itself. The republicans, as a : ule, dropped their factional differences and worked together. A few republicans voted for Stickley, but the number was very
